The Rubber Tree. In the window of the restaurant Where steaks are rippling free, With leaves outspread we now observe
The solemn rubber tree.

In candy stores it also blooms; And in the shops of rugs It, in the window, casts its shade On terra cotta jugs.

Where'er we go we're sure to find The somber rubber tree, Until we wonder what on earth It's mission e'er can be.

We see it in the lone back yard, We see it near and far, We see it on the oyster stand, The barber shop and bar. We see it on the airy porch, Upon the sideboard, too; We see it at the druggist's door, The sunny rephyr woo.

We see it on the flat's high roof Where frisky swallows cosr.
The only place it doesn't bloom
Is in the rubber store.

S. BENSINGER,

The Art of Reading.

It has been for years the custom for the world to speak of society women as spending their lives in the pursuit only of pleasure, and to ascribe all literary tastes and knowledge to those women who "do not care for society." The woman who would be a belle in these fin de siecle days has to depend on a great deal more than mere beauty and fine clothes. The first will take her . long way, it must be confessed, and the two combined will do a great deal, but there must be something more. She must not only be up in the topics of the day, which include: the books of the day, but must be able to talk well on all subjects. One reason why married women have such a time to reading or being read to. Readings are always fashionable, winter or summer. A series of readings will be gotten up by a fashionable woman, or women, for a protege-man or woman, as the case may be-in whom they are interested. Circulars are sent around to a number of intimate friends, and it is ar-ranged that the readings shall take place at the houses of the different patro

The price of tickets for a course of readings varies, but not always in proportion to the ability of the reader. Very rarely are even light refreshments served. The hostess in an urdertone begs her especial friends to stop and have luncheon, or, if it be in the afternoon, to have a cup of tes, the only difference between a reading in a private house and a lecture in public being that one is thoroughly impressed with the feeling that the former is more select and exclusive

READINGS IN LENT.

The Lenten season is par excellence the time for these entertainments, but all the year round they are going on. Before the summer gayety begins at Newport, or the autumn gayety at Lenox, is conceded to be an excellent opportunity, and it is astonishing how power different profilers. ishing how many different readings a fashanable woman finds it possible to attend without feeling brain-weary. French readings, or lectures-for that is really what they amount to-always go well, winter or summer.

Mrs. Frederick Vanderbilt is known to be a lavish patroness of readings, and is most generous in organizing them as well as in giving the use of her bouse. She is now much interested in a series which is to be given in Newport at the different cottages

The Misses Furniss also are known to be or ber an audience. At Lenox no less than in New York they pursue the same plan.

Mrs. William T. Blodgett, Mrs. Theodore Havemeyer, Mrs. Burden, Mrs. Wysong, Mrs.

and a score of others whose names and give their houses for readings.

In consequence they are besieged with applications until they sometimes say they will refuse everybody, even their friends. Mrs. Cooper Hewitt and her sister, Mrs. Burke Roche, can always be relied upon to make part of the audience at any reading worth listening to. They, like most other society women, are good linguists, so the fact of the reading being in a foreign lan-guage does not deter them. That fact does not deter any one, though, for nothing is general time allotted, and when one goes late and comes away early there is no reason for feeling overtired, even in summer some of those given at Newport have been well worth hearing. The series that is-going on now is immensely popular, and it

It must be confessed that quite different people are often to be seen at the readings the fashion to transfer the tickets to so citement and to whom a reading comes as entertainments, of the kind where the invi tations are not limited to a select few, and where quantity, not quality, is the desider-atum.

ings afford an excellent opportunity. No reader succeeds who is not thorough. The subject must be carefully prepared, for the audience is generally critical, and besides, as a rule, has studied or read up in Fads may be fleeting, but while they last they are most intense and brook no surface treatment.

well read and cultivated, and while renerosity and philanthropy influence women to give their patronage to those in whom they are interested, if there be not something really clever in the protege one It is well known that the demands made for patronage of this kind come by every mail, and the only wonder is that people do not get tired out with opportunities.
